The East Syriac Psalm Headings in Manuscript 18>8dt1: Manchester, John Rylands Library, Rylands Syriac Manuscript 4

HERRIE VAN ROOY (NORTH-WEST UNIVERSITY)

ABSTRACT

Manuscript 18>8dt1 dates from AD 1727 and was copied from an earlier Eastern manuscript, now lost. The oldest manuscript that contains the East Syriac headings is 6t1, a Western manuscript with Western orthography. The oldest Eastern manuscripts that contain these headings date from the twelfth century. The John Rylands manuscript contains the headings in a form 400 years older than the oldest of the other Eastern manuscripts, giving new insight into the history of these headings. The value of this manuscript can be judged when its headings are compared to those in 6t1 and 12t4. Many headings have shorter and longer versions. This paper explores the place of 18>8dt1 in the history of the East Syriac Psalm headings to demonstrate the originality of many of the readings in this manuscript. The conclusion is the headings in 6t1 cannot always be regarded as reflecting the original headings.

INTRODUCTION

Manuscript 18>8dt1 dates from AD 1727 and was copied from an earlier Eastern manuscript, now lost. It was given the number 18<13dt1 in the original list of manuscripts published by the Peshitta Institute in Leiden. That has now been changed to 18<8dt1, which means the original manuscript copied was from the 8th century, and not the 13th century, as had been thought earlier. The oldest manuscript that contains these headings is 6t1, a Western manuscript with Western orthography. The oldest Eastern manuscripts containing these headings date from the 12th century. The John Rylands manuscript contains the headings in a form 400 years older than the oldest of the other Eastern manuscripts, giving new insight into the history of these headings. The value of this manuscript can... be judged when its headings are compared to those in 6t1 and 12t4. Many headings have shorter and longer versions. In some instances, 18>8dt1 agrees with 12t4 and 6t1 in having a longer heading, as in Pss 2 and 9. Sometimes, 6t1 has a longer reading, while 12t4 and 18>8dt1 have shorter readings (Pss 11 and 42). This paper will explore the place of 18>8dt1 in the history of the East Syriac Psalm headings with a view to demonstrate the originality of many of the readings contained in this manuscript.

B THREE IMPORTANT MANUSCRIPTS WITH THE EAST SYRIAC HEADINGS

The manuscripts to which this contribution refers are among those for which the Peshitta Institute in Leiden developed a siglum to identify them for the publication of a critical edition of the Peshitta. Each siglum consists of three parts. The number at the beginning refers to the century to which the manuscript is dated, the following letter indicates the kind of manuscript and the number at the end distinguishes the different manuscripts of the specific group from the specific century. The siglum for the codex ambrosianus was used to indicate the basic format of the siglum for most of the books in the edition. It is 7a1, which means the first manuscript from the 7th century containing the whole Bible. The siglum 6t1 indicates the first manuscript of the Psalms from the 6th century, which is the oldest manuscript that contains the East Syriac headings.

The headings of the Psalms in the Hebrew Bible were not retained in the manuscripts of the Peshitta. Some Syriac Psalm manuscripts have no headings for the Psalms. Bloemendaal distinguishes four groups of manuscripts as far as headings are concerned. The groups are manuscripts with the East Syriac headings, manuscripts with the West Syrian tradition (as in 7a), the headings in editions such as the edition of Lee, and manuscripts with a mixture of headings. The East Syriac headings are related to the great commentary of Theodore of Mopsuestia on the Psalms, as Baethgen already stated in 1885.

In a critical edition of the East Syriac Psalm headings, 17 different manuscripts were used, as well as three printed editions from the 19th century that contain these headings. For this contribution, three manuscripts are of special importance, namely 18<8dt1, 6t1 and 12t4. They will be discussed briefly.

1 Manuscript 18<8dt1: Manchester, John Rylands Library, Rylands Syriac Manuscript 4

This manuscript dates to AD 1727 and was copied in China from an earlier manuscript, now lost.⁷ Originally, the earlier manuscript was dated to the 13th century, but later it was realised that the original manuscript dated from the 8th century, thus the siglum 18<8dt1.⁸

A complete description of this manuscript is given by Coakley.⁹ The first published information about the manuscript dates to 1831 in a note on Syriac manuscripts by S. de Sacy, who said he obtained the manuscript from the heirs of “M. l’abbé Brottier.”¹⁰ The manuscript is a facsimile made in China. Mingana also refers to this manuscript. He has read the colophon of the manuscript and says it states the original manuscript dates to the year 1064 of the Greeks (that is AD 752/3), and 134 of the Hijrah, in the time of Cyprian, the metropolitan of Nisibis.¹¹ Coakley states the titles are those of the East Syrian tradition and that in some cases white space have replaced them entirely or in part. This means the headings or part of them had already been unclear to the Chinese copyist.¹² The original manuscript, copied in China, is older than the oldest Eastern manuscript that contains the headings of the Eastern tradition. The China copy of the original manuscript was read on microfilm at the Peshitta Institute in Leiden and the original China copy at the John Rylands Library as well.

2 Manuscript 6t1: London, British Library, Add. Manuscript 17,110

This manuscript dates from AD 600 or earlier. It had previously been given the number 7t1 in the list of the Peshitta Institute, but that was changed to 6t1.¹³ Wright published the first complete description of this manuscript.¹⁴ He notes that the headings differ from those in the edition of Lee, as well as from those in additional manuscripts 14,436 and 17,109. The orthography of the manuscript is Western, while the headings are from the Eastern tradition.

3 Manuscript 12t4: Baghdad, Library of the Chaldean Patriarchate, Manuscript 1113, folios 11a-118b (formerly Mossoul, Library of the Chaldean Patriarchate, Manuscript 1113)

Manuscript 12t4 dates from the 12th century. It is the most important Eastern text used for the critical edition of the Psalms. It has four headings for each Psalm. Three are linked to Eusebius, Athanasius and Theodore, while there are headings labelled “Hebrew”.

C THE HEADINGS IN THE RYLANDS MANUSCRIPT

Before discussing some headings in detail, the general view of variants in the East Syriac headings is briefly explained. In Peshitta manuscripts, the headings of the Hebrew text were not retained but replaced by different headings. In the East Syriac tradition, the headings are related to the interpretation of the psalms by Theodore of Mopsuestia. The heading, which usually gives a historical setting for a specific psalm, can be regarded as a short summary of Theodore’s hypothesis at the beginning of his interpretation of a psalm. He did his interpretation in the light of the hypothesis.

The general view of these Syriac headings is offered by Vosté, followed by Bloemendaal, namely that the East Syriac headings did not change much over the centuries, with the most important change the abbreviation of some headings in more recent manuscripts. A detailed study of the headings in 18>8dt1 and 12t4 presents a different picture. To illustrate this finding, a few examples will be discussed first. Not all variants in all the manuscripts will receive attention. The focus will be on the main trends that can be distinguished with reference to the three oldest manuscripts containing the Eastern headings, namely 6t1, 18>8dt1 and 12t4. The most important readings of the headings will be given in Syriac with an English translation, but where the exact reading of the Syriac does not make a substantial contribution to the discussion, only a translation will be supplied. All the examples will begin with the reading of the specific heading in the Rylands manuscript.

17 Bloemendaal, Headings, 13. This is the manuscript Bloemendaal used for his diplomatic edition of the headings.
18 Walter, Psalms, XXVII.
19 This manuscript was discussed in detail before; see Herculaas F. van Rooy, “The ‘Hebrew, Psalm headings in the Syriac manuscript 12t4,” Journal of Northwest Semitic Languages 25 (1999): 225-237, and Herculaas F. van Rooy, Studies on the Syriac Apocryphal Psalms (Journal of Semitic Studies Supplement 7; Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999).

The first example is Psalm 115, which has a double heading referring to Hezekiah and the exiles in Babylon. In this instance, the longer heading was the original, with different summaries or omissions in different manuscripts.

He points out the things that were done to the people in Babel and they praised God about their return. And spoken in the person of Hezekiah when he was sick about what had been taken away.

There are only a few minor differences between this heading and the headings in 6t1 and 12t4. Both add the relative particle before “in Babel”. Manuscript 6t1 adds ܪܝܫ ܦܠܓܗ (“the head of its division”) to the end of the first part of the heading and omits the “and” before “spoken”.

This is one of the few headings of the Psalms that have a double heading. Some of the later manuscripts (6t2, 17t1, M507) have only the first part of the heading (“He points out the things that were done to the people in Babel and they praised God about their return. The printed Peshitta and Psalter of Urmia have both parts, but in shortened form (“He points out the calamities that the people had endured in Babel and also speaks about Hezekiah, who became ill about what had been taken away”). Something similar occurs in 17t3. Manuscript 13t3 has a shortened version of the first part of the heading (“He points out the calamities that the people in Babel had to endure”). Manuscript M428 has a shortened version of the second part of the heading (“Spoken about Hezekiah, when he became ill about what had been taken away”).

This is an interesting example as most of the headings give just one setting for a psalm. The fact that the double heading appears in the oldest manuscripts pleads for its originality and it fits the idea of abbreviation as proposed by Vosté.

Psalm 9 is the second example where the major variant is of the kind discussed by Vosté and Bloemendaal. A longer heading occurs in the majority of the manuscripts (with minor variants):

Thanksgiving of David for the victory of the people and the condemnation of the nations surrounding them.
A shorter heading occurs in M428 and the edition from Mosul. The second part of the heading (“Thanksgiving of David for the victory of the people”) is omitted, but the first part of the original heading is retained. The longer form is retained in the three important manuscripts, but also in more recent manuscripts and the edition and Psalter from Urmia.

Psalm 11 is an interesting example with regard to the three important manuscripts. 18>8dt1 and 12t4 have the same heading, while 6t1 has a slightly shorter version of the heading. Manuscript 6t1 reads:

When David was pursued by Saul and those who were with him counselled him to flee before him.

18>8dt1 and 12t4 have the following:

Spoken by David when he was pursued by Saul and those who were with him counselled him to flee before him.

6t1 has a shorter version of the heading without “spoken by David”. It is more probable to accept the addition of this general introduction than to accept its omission. Thus, it has to be accepted that this heading was expanded by the addition of the introduction in the later manuscripts.

In the next section, some important examples will be discussed where the headings of 18>8dt1 are important to help determine the original heading.

In many instances, 18>8dt1 has a reading longer than some of the more recent manuscripts, especially 13t3, M428 and M. In most of these instances, the longer reading is supported by 6t1 and/or 12t4. Examples of this kind occur in many psalms, such as Pss 9; 15; 16; 18; 23; 24; 29; 30; 32; 33 and many more. Ps 9 is a typical example. The difference between the two headings is very typical of this kind of variant, where the longer heading consists of more than one phrase and only the first phrase is retained in the shorter heading. The longer heading is:

Thanksgiving of David for the victory of the people and condemnation of the nations surrounding them.

M428 and M omit the second part.

Such variants lead Vosté, followed by Bloemendaal, to conclude the main variants in the East Syriac headings are shortened versions of the original heading. This kind of variant occurs frequently, but is not the only type of variant. There are about 30 psalms where the headings remained fairly consistent in all the manuscripts. In the instances where shorter headings are found, they are restricted to a number of manuscripts in most instances. There are 44 instances where the shorter heading occurs in 13t3 and M428; in some instances, one or a few other manuscripts have shorter headings as well. In 31 instances, the shorter heading occurs in 13t3, along with some other manuscripts in some instances, except M428. In 25 instances, shorter headings occur in M428 and some other manuscripts, but not in 13t3. Although these shorter headings are important, the fact that they are restricted to just a small number of manuscripts makes them less important than some of the other possibilities discussed below.

There are a few headings where 6t1 has a longer reading than the majority of manuscripts, while 18>8dt1 and 12t4 support the shorter reading. For Psalm 10, only 6t1 and 13t1 have ܡܬܢܒܐ at the beginning of the heading. In Ps 61, 6t1 adds ܕܢܩ ܒܠܘܢ (“to receive”) after ܕܫܐܠܝܢ in agreement with 13t1 and 13t4 (“He relates the things done to the people in Babel and how they asked for help”).

Psalm 104 is a very interesting example. 6t1 has a slightly longer reading (with amongst others 16t2 and 17t1), than the majority of manuscripts while 18>8dt1 and 12t4 (with 13t1, 13t2, 13t4, 17t2, 17t3, M25, M507 U, UP and M) do not have the reference to “help”.

ܗܘ ܠܩܡ ܠܒܘܕ ܕܒܢܐ ܐܬܢܒ ܡܢ ܒܠܘܢ ܕܥܒܘܕܬܗ ܘܡܘܕ ܕܟܠ ܚܕܐ ܡܢ ܝܬܗ ̈ ܒܪ ܬܡܝܗܐܝܬ ܡܢܗ ܐܬܬܩܢܬ.

He narrates about the greatness of the help of God in the variety of his (creative) activity and says that God formed every one of his creatures admirably.

In these instances, where the shorter heading is found in 12t4 and 18>8dt1, the shorter heading cannot be regarded as a late variant, but must be evaluated in its own right. In these instances, the shorter heading may be closer to the original than the heading of 6t1.

In some instances, most of the manuscripts, including 18>8dt1 and 12t4, have a longer reading than 6t1; however, 6t1 has the same information as the other manuscripts, although it is constructed in a different way. Ps 11 is a good example. 18>8dt1 and 12t4 have the following heading:

ܢܗܪܢ ܠܢ ܢܬܐ ܡܬ ܒܓܘ ܠܡܢ ܠܐ ܐܫܡ ܐܠܗܐ ܠܒܘܕ ܠܡܢ ܠܡܥܪܩ ܩܕܡܘܗܝ.

Spoken by David when he was pursued by Saul and those who were with him counselled him to flee before him.
6t1 has the same information:

When David was pursued by Saul and those who were with him counselled him to flee before him.

In this instance, 6t1 does not have the introduction linking the psalm to David (“Spoken by David”). This makes it necessary to add the name of David after the verb (“was pursued”). The fact that the two other important manuscripts and the majority of the other manuscripts have the introduction creates the possibility that they contain the original heading.

Psalm 42 is a similar example. 6t1 has a construction different from the other manuscripts, for example 18>8dt1 and 12t4, but they all have the same content. The text reads אֶמֶרָּה דָּוִד for אֶמֶרָּה לוֹדִיד in the other manuscripts, and לְמַעֲרָּה for מַעֲרָּה (“Spoken by David, in the person of the people in Babel, telling them what words to use in the time of their exile”). In these instances, it should not be accepted that the heading of 6t1 is necessarily closer to the original, but rather the heading supported by the other two important manuscripts.

A minor difference is found in Ps 20 when 6t1 is compared to the other manuscripts. All the headings connect the Psalm to Hezekiah and the Assyrians. 6t1 refers to the time when Hezekiah was delivered from the Assyrians, while the others refer to the time when he was oppressed by the Assyrians. No remark on this psalm by Theodore has been preserved. Diodore links both Pss 20 and 21 to Hezekiah and the Assyrians: Ps 20 to the time before Hezekiah and the deliverance of Jerusalem from the Assyrians, and Ps 21 to the joy after the deliverance. 22 This could make it possible that 6t1 preserves the older version of the headings. In Ps 20, however, 6t1 has the verb אֵתְפֵּשׁ (“to be delivered”), while the other manuscripts have אֵתְאַלְפֵּשׁ (“to be oppressed”). Again, from the above arguments, a general conclusion cannot be made that 6t1 has preserved the original reading.

The heading of Ps 41 in 6t1 refers to the sickness (בָּשַׁלַּה) of Hezekiah. This is the reading of the majority of the witnesses. However, 18>8dt1, 12t1, 12t4 and M25 refer to his affliction (בָּלַע). In the commentary of Theodore, he refers to Hezekiah’s illness in this psalm, 23 making it possible that 6t1 has retained the original heading. Again, this possibility does not warrant a general conclusion.

22 See Robert C. Hill, Diodore of Tarsus: Commentary on Psalms 1-51 (WGRW 9; Atlanta; GA: SBL, 2005), 64-65.
Ps 46 is one of the instances where 6t1 has its own version with the following heading:

ܥܠܚܙܩܝܐܘܕܒܝܬܝܚܘܕܐܕܐܫܬܘܙܒܘܡܢܐܕܪ̈ܡܘܣܩܝܘܡܢܕܒܝܬܐܦܪܝܡ

About Hezekiah and those of the house of Judah who were delivered from the Damascenes and from those of the house of Ephraim.

With a few minor variations, the following heading occurs in the majority of the other witnesses, including the two other important Eastern manuscripts:

ܥܠܐܚܙܘܕܒܝܬܚܙܩܝܐܕܐܫܬܘܙܒܘܡܢܐܕܪ̈ܡܘܣܩܝܘܡܢܕܒܝܬܐܦܪܝܡ

About Ahaz and those of the house of Hezekiah that were delivered from the Damascenes and from those of the house of Ephraim.

In this instance, the introduction of Theodore to this psalm refers to Ahaz and not to Hezekiah at all. In the commentary on this psalm, there is also no reference to Hezekiah.24 Here again, the two oldest Eastern witnesses probably have the original heading.

In Ps 82, 6t1, 18>8dt1 and 12t4 (together with some other witnesses) have a much shorter heading than a number of more recent witnesses.

ܨܠܘܬܗܕܚܙܩܝܐܟܕܚܕܝܪܝܢܗܘܘܠܗܐܬܘܪ̈ܝܐܘܫܐܠܡܢܐܠܗܐܓܗܝܬܐܕܡܢܗܘܢ.

Prayer of Hezekiah when the Assyrians surrounded him and he asked God to deliver him from them.

The longer heading occurs in M25 and M:

ܐܡܝܪܠדܘܕܐܝܟܨܠܘܬܐܡܕܡܡܢܦܘܡܕܚܙܩܝܐܡܠܟܐܟܐܢܐܟܕܚܕܝܪܝܢܗܘܘܠܗܝܐܪ̈ܐܬܘܫܐܠܡܢܐܠܗܐܓܗܝܬܐܕܡܢܗܘܢ

Spoken by David as a sort of prayer from the mouth of Hezekiah, the just king, when the Assyrians surrounded him and he asked God to deliver him from them.

Here the shorter heading is to be regarded as the original, while an expansion occurs in manuscripts that are more recent. This is contrary to the general trend as stated by Vosté and Bloemendaal.

For Ps 126, 6t1 has the following heading:

Spoken in the person of the people after their return when their enemies impeded them.

To the above, 18>8dt1 and 12t4 add ܡܢ ܒܢܝܢܗ ܕܗܝܟܠܐ (“from the building of the temple”) (as is done by 13t1, 13t2, 13t3, 13t4, 17t1 and 17t3).

17t2, M25, U, U^, M have a much-expanded heading:

Spoken by David in the person of the people after their return when their enemies prevented them from building the temple by the hands of Zerubbabel from the tribe of Judah.

This is a very important example. The additional phrase that occurs in 12t4, 18>8dt1 and a number of other manuscripts makes perfect sense. The omission in 6t1 makes the exact context of the heading unclear. In this instance, the shortened heading of 6t1 must be an early revision of the slightly longer original heading, while 17t2 and others have a more recent expanded version.

At the end of the heading of Ps 146, 18>8dt1 and 12t4 add ܥܒܘܕܐ ܕܟܠ, as is done by 13t1, 13t4, 16t2, 17t1, 17t3 and M25 (“He prophesies about the people in Babel and gives praise in their person for that that was done for them by God”).

These examples go against the view of Bloemendaal and Vosté that original longer headings were shortened in later manuscripts. It has to be remembered that many of the headings, for example, those of Pss 22; 25 and 27, were quite short in 6t1 and all the other witnesses. It may be quite possible that in some instances, 6t1 has an expanded heading, while the shorter heading may be the original.

It is also clear from the examples discussed that in many instances, 6t1, 8>8dt1 and 12t4 have a reading longer than some of the more recent manuscripts, especially 13t3, M428 and M. This kind of heading that leads Vosté to conclude that the main variants in the headings are shortened versions of the original heading. Because these shorter headings occur in only a few of the manuscripts, this phenomenon should not lead to conclusions about a general trend.

There are a number of examples where 6t1 (supported by one or two manuscripts that are more recent) have a slightly longer heading than most of the other manuscripts, as in Pss 10; 16 and 104. The longer headings in these instances have just one word more than the more general heading. This may reflect a change from the original heading in 6t1, so that 18>8dt1 and 12t4 reflect the more original heading. The same is probably true in those instances where the heading in 6t1 has the same information as the other manuscripts but phrased in a slightly different way. Ps 11 is a good example in this regard.

In three instances, 6t1 has a heading different from the other manuscripts. The headings here have a slightly different setting, as is the case of Ps 20 discussed above. In this instance, 6t1 has no support from any manuscript. The same is true of the variant in Ps 46. In this instance, the commentary of Theodore has no reference to Hezekiah, as discussed above. In Ps 41, 6t1 has a reading that occurs in other manuscripts as well, but not in 18>8dt1 and 12t4. In these instances, 6t1 probably also reflects an early revision of the heading.

In a number of instances, 6t1 has a shorter heading. Some of these are related to a single word, as in Pss 20 and 41. In Ps 44, it omits the final phrase of the heading (as in M). As the reference to Antiochus, who forced the people, was part of the summary of Theodore\(^\text{25}\) and as the heading makes more sense with the addition, the heading of 6t1 is probably secondary. See Ps 128, where 6t1 omits the last two words. More important are examples such as Ps 82, where 6t1 is substantially shorter. In this instance, the reading of 6t1 has substantial support, and the shorter heading is probably the original one. The same is true of the headings of Pss 108 and 110.

Psalm 126 is an interesting example, as discussed above. Some more recent witnesses have a much longer heading. A somewhat shorter heading occurs in the majority of manuscripts. 6t1 has a shortened heading, omitting the phrase “from building the temple”. This phrase occurs in 18>8dt1, 12t4 and many other manuscripts. In this instance, 18>8dt1 and 12t4 probably have the original heading, while 6t1 has undergone an early revision and the more recent witnesses a much later revision, as discussed above. The same is true of Ps 146.

As far as other variants in 12t4 and 18>8dt1 are concerned, 18>8dt1 has only one unique reading (Ps 86), while 12t4 has quite a number of variants, sometimes supported by other manuscripts. This testifies to the probability that 18>8dt1 is much closer to the original than both 6t1 and 12t4.

Conclusion

The examples discussed lead to the conclusion that 6t1 must not be regarded as the paradigmatic witness in all instances. Where 6t1 is supported by both 12t4 and 18>8dt1, the reading can be regarded as at least being close to the original. When 18>8dt1 supports 6t1, and 12t4 has variants, the reading of 6t1 and 18>8dt1 can be regarded as closer to the original. When 12t4 and 18>8dt1 have a reading different from 6t1, the reading of these two manuscripts is probably closer to the original.
